

KING'S CLUB

FIVE-LEVEL MULTI-VENUE CASTLE IS CHICAGO'S NEW NIGHTLIFE ROYALTY

For a regal gentlemen such as yourself, partying in a club will no longer suffice.

You need a castle.

Luckily, such a castle has been erected where longtime downtown clubs Excalibur and Vision once stood in the form of the new five-level behemoth Castle.

If the Stark brothers had time to party (and lived in modern-day Chicago), this is where they'd go. Among the five separate venues (or "social environments") the main focus is the top floor nightclub Palladium, a sea of neon light outfitted with 3D HD video projection systems and nine LED video walls.

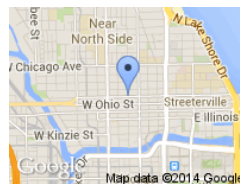

Replacing Vision is the new three-level LGBT-focused dance and visual arts club Sanctuary, with an additional first floor space called Cabaret offering dueling pianos and interactive MCs.

But perhaps the most interesting addition is the new first-floor Craft Pub & Eatery, an upscale English pub of Gothic castle-style columns and keg cocktails. Stop in for an Absolut and tea-based Buty Call and a Left Hand Milk Stout Nitro craft beer and a chili burger, brick oven pizza, or wild mushroom risotto.

And if that's not enough, you can always cool off by playing pool in the chilled-out basement Lair Lounge.

We may not have a new pope yet, but Chicago's new king of clubbing has clearly ascended the throne.
